

Brett Daniels is an Environmental Scientist with the California Department of Fish and Wildlife and has been a part of the Salton Sea Management Program since 2022. He has over 30 years' experience in the field, with 23 of those years spent in the Coachella Valley. He previously served as the biologist and aquatic invasive species expert for the Coachella Valley Water District and as Environmental Programs Director for the City of Coachella. A recognized desert reptilian and desert pupfish expert, Brett has led field research efforts, provided venomous reptile training and talks, and worked on numerous southwestern restoration projects. He is an avid traveler and recently returned from a biological survey effort for a non-profit in Madre de Dios, Peru. His next mission is a herpetological trip to Suriname in 2025. Brett is based out of the CDFW Bermuda Dunes office.
